NEWS: GEORGIA SWINGS LEFT, FLIPS US SENATE

JANUARY 28, 2021 | ELIZA MEALEY | 16 COMMENTS

The US Senate flip and momentous victory by Democrats in the Georgia Senate Runoff Election occurred when the nation's Capital was under attack by pro-Trump radicals. In case you missed this news, here are some summary points regarding the process and outcome of this significant moment in Senate history.

Republicans stayed home. The Washington Post reported that North Georgia had almost 75,000 fewer Republican votes than in the November presidential election, while Democratic votes only decreased by approximately 17,000.

Stacey Abrams was credited for bringing out minority voters. Some heralded Stacey Abrams, a political strategist and the unsuccessful candidate for Governor in 2018, as responsible for boosting voter turnout among minority groups. She focused on getting over 800,000 underrepresented voters registered and to the polls in the last two years. These efforts may have contributed to the election's noteworthy outcome: Georgia elected its first Black senator in state history, the Rev. Raphael Warnock, and first Jewish senator, Jon Ossof.

Defying previous voting trends, Georgia turned Blue. The state's shift from the Republican to Democratic party caused the United States Senate to flip as well. The Senate is now 50/50, an equal number of Democrats and Republicans. However, the Democrats actually have the majority because Democratic Vice President Kamala Harris, as the President of the Senate, has the tie-breaking vote.

President Biden will have more freedom to implement their agenda. Some of the priorities of the Biden administration include a meaningful stimulus in 2021 to help Americans cope with the economic impact of the Covid-19 pandemic; speedier vaccination implementation with a goal of 100 million people vaccinated in 100 days, and a strong sustainability agenda. Biden has already rejoined the Paris Climate agreement; whose goal is to limit global warming to well under two degrees Celsius compared to pre-industrial levels (UNFCCC).

It was a wild 2020, and this first glimpse of 2021 suggests change and mystery for the country's future.
