NEWS: THE “WIGHT-OUT” ON CAMPUS HAS ENDED!

MAY 2, 2022 | ERIN VERCH | 91 COMMENTS

Mr. Clark Wight, President of The St. Paul’s Schools, has finally found an office on campus—it’s on the second floor of the Brooklandwood Mansion. Before settling on this space, Mr. Wight was a nomad—he spent time in all three divisions and, during warm weather, held many meetings by the flagpole at the top of the hill.

Now, he has fewer hills to walk up each day, as he jokingly mentioned in a recent interview. But besides the countless travels that Mr. Wight makes around campus, he has the chance to see and work in every place at St. Paul’s, and even choose a favorite. “My favorite place to work is in the Trustee room of the girl’s school,” he told me. “It’s above the Learning Commons. I love that room because you can actually look down onto the lacrosse and football fields.”

Moving around campus without an office gave Mr. Wight the unique opportunity to interact with students and faculty more frequently. He joked that in the beginning of his time at St. Paul’s, he “got confused between the Learning Commons and the Student Commons at the Girl’s School, and I kept showing up at the wrong meetings, but then I started to figure it out.” Despite the challenge of learning all the many locations on campus, Mr. Wight considers his time without an office as a great opportunity to be around the faculty and students more.

Even though Mr. Wright now has an office and doesn’t need to travel long distances across campus anymore, he continues his efforts to stay connected to the the school community. “I have always had an open-door policy in my office, as long as I have been the head of any school,” he explained. “I do think that I need to be more proactive about having the lunch meetings with different students, and we are about to start a strategic plan in which we are looking at what kind of school we want to be in 5, 10, or 50 years.”

Mr. Wight’s open-door policy and student lunches will bring more students into Brooklandwood. He also explained that he “actually put on my calendar today, I wrote WTC for Walk the Campus. And so for most days, it doesn’t get taken by something else, but when I see it, my job is to close my laptop and stop what I am doing.” This rule reminds him of the importance of being physically involved in the school community and being able to speak with students and create more relationships in the community.

Mr. Wright plans to adorn his office walls with the three mission statements of the schools and student artwork, in addition to his whiteboards. Apart from this decor, Mr. Wright envisions a purpose for the space overall, saying that he “likes the idea that it can be a meeting place, it can be an idea creation space, it can be a comfortable chat place, and there is something about space with light and air that is pretty special.” The multifaceted office creates a lot of opportunities, but as Mr. Wright said, “if we push a few things sideways we can play floor hockey, possibly with a resident ghost!”

With the future of St. Paul’s always in mind, Mr. Wright discussed the future for the All-School President’s office. When asked where on the campus he would put his office if he were to move it, he replied without hesitation, the “Ward Center.” In the future, the p resident’s office will hopefully move there. The Ward Center is “centrally located on campus, and eventually when we get food service back next fall, there will be kids in there every day for lunch and to me that becomes our meeting place. The Ward Center becomes a place where everyone can have discussions and conversations, those things that you never expect to happen can happen in the Ward Center when everyone is having lunch together. And to me it’s just such a great central place with a beautiful stunning view.”

A relocation of the president’s office to the Ward Center, located between the schools, will be a visible symbol of unification and allow the president to be heavily involved in the community. But for now, Mr. Wright’s new office is a big step in permanently unifying the schools—and he no longer has to wander campus, looking for a place to meet and work.
